

DEMI MOORE: SILVER FOX?

She was once rumored to have spent close to half a million dollars on plastic surgery, but Demi Moore is finally ready to embrace her age. The 53-year-old has decided to go au naturel when it comes to her trademark Brunette locks, and she's now proudly letting the gray show through. And sources say this casual, low-maintenance look, which she debuted during a lunch date with a friend in West Hollywood on June 4, is just the beginning of her empowering new mindset.

"Demi has spent so much time and money trying to maintain her youthful appearance, but it wasn't making her happy," explains a confidant. The single star also realized that, ironically, her obsession with youth was hindering both her career and her love life. "For a long time she was convinced she couldn't get work or a man if she didn't look like she was in her thirties," adds the insider. "But she finally gets that nothing is more attractive than someone who is truly comfortable in their own skin." ★

COLBERT'S LATE-NIGHT TAILSPIN

There aren't many laughs behind the scenes at Stephen Colbert's late-night chat show. Poor ratings, lame gags and flat jokes have left the star frazzled and fearful that The Late Show is about to get canceled. "He's trying to keep his chin up, but this job is so much more stressful than he imagined," admits a friend close to the political comic, adding that even CBS' plan to hire new writers probably won't give the show much of a boost if Colbert doesn't embrace pop culture. "People watch Jimmy Fallon and James Corden because they genuinely enjoy their celeb guests," explains the source. "But Colbert doesn't care about celebrities, and viewers can tell. It makes interviews hard to watch; he just comes across as aloof and uninterested." ★
